

His Holiness Patriarch Kirill chairs joint session of the Holy Synod and the Supreme Church Council of the Russian Orthodox Church, first in a hundred years

On the 25th of December 2019, in the Red Hall of the Cathedral of Christ the Saviour in Moscow, a joint session of the Holy Synod and the Supreme Church Council of the Russian Orthodox Church began under the chairmanship of His Holiness Patriarch Kirill of Moscow and All Russia.

The Primate of the Russian Orthodox Church delivered an opening address, noting, in particular, the importance of this session in the history of church governing institutions:

“We are opening a joint session of the Holy Synod and the Supreme Church Council of the Russian Orthodox Church.

“I would like to say a few words about the historical examples that provide a basis for the establishment of working bodies of church governance with the view of addressing pressing problems.

“As for the recently recreated Supreme Church Council, its history goes back to the previous century. The Supreme Church Council headed by the Patriarch was established by the Local Council of the Russian Orthodox Church on the 7th of December 1917. The Supreme Church Council was to tackle various ecclesiosocial, economic, financial, school and educational issues, so that the Holy Synod could deal not with the “horizontal” agenda, but with the “vertical” one, that is, resolve theological and canonical matters, as well as such issues as canonization of saints, opening of churches and monasteries, etc.

“Such was the agenda set forth by the Local Council of our Church in 1917, and, indeed, the Supreme Church Council began to function. At the post-Council time there appeared a practice of holding joint meetings of the two institutions – the Holy Synod and the Supreme Church Council – but the tradition stopped suddenly on the 20th of November 1920, when the last joint meeting took place, and after the death of Patriarch Tikhon the Supreme Church Council did not convene.

“In 2009 we set about forming new Synodal departments and were faced with a task of creating a body for discussing the agenda common for all the Synodal institutions. With the view of coordinating the work of the Synodal bodies we started holding meetings of their heads. Several such meetings took place, and in 2011 the Synod and then, in February 2011, the Bishops’ Council decided “to give to the meeting of the heads of the Synodal institutions the proper status with the name ‘Supreme Church Council’.”

“In other words, the Supreme Church Council established by the Bishops’ Council in 2011, undoubtedly, differed from the Supreme Church Council of the time of His Holiness Patriarch Tikhon. However, the Supreme Church Council was entrusted with the tasks, many of which were on the agenda of the Supreme Church Council under Patriarch Tikhon. On the 14th of April 2011, in the Red Hall of the Cathedral of Christ the Saviour, the Supreme Church Council held its first session.

“Today is an important event in the history of church governing institutions. On the threshold of the centenary of the last joint meeting of the Holy Synod and the Supreme Church Council we are holding the first joint session, reviving the tradition severed by the troubled 20th century.”

The joint session of the two bodies of supreme church governance was organized for the first time in a hundred years with the view of resolving ecclesiocanonical problems, addressing issues of church governance and efficient planning, and considering annual reports of the Synodal institutions.
