The Primate of the Russian Orthodox Church greeted the prize winners and participants in the ceremony.

His Holiness Patriarch Irinej of Serbia also delivered a speech, saying in particular:

“In 2002, at a time of hardships for the Serbian Orthodox Church and the Serbian people, my predecessor, Patriarch Pavle of blessed memory, received this prize from the late Patriarch Alexy II of Moscow and All Russia. I regard this award not as a prize for me personally, but as a dear token of love and care for all the Serbian people. I wholeheartedly thank the board of trustees and the president of this foundation for considering me worthy of this honour. It is a symbol of support for our people and for our Church, which suffers terrible persecution in Kosovo and Metohija and has to defend her centuries-old rights in the countries of former Yugoslavia for bringing the Holy Orthodoxy to the world and for remaining firm in the faith of the fathers.”

An address by Mr. Viktor Zubkov followed. “Russia's future is inseparable from its spiritual heritage. By combining our efforts we can not only preserve, but also multiply this wealth. Therefore our cooperation with the Russian Orthodox Church and with the International Public Foundation for the Unity of Orthodox Christian Nations will continue,” the laureate said.

His Holiness Patriarch Kirill and Mr. Valery Alexeyev, president of the foundation, presented the prizes to His Holiness Patriarch Irinej of Serbia and to Mr. Viktor Zubkov.
