The meeting summed up the two actions for aid to the suffering population in Syria, which took place on June 22-24 and August 22-24, 2017, and unanimously noted the progress made in the development of the project. The aid collected by Russian religious organizations was given to people in refugee camps near Latakia, in Aleppo, Homs and in the de-escalation zone close to it. A part of the supply was added to the aid brought by the Russian center for reconciliation of the warring parties to the city of El-Kamysh in northeastern Syria for the first time. The aid consisted mainly of foodstuffs and medicines. However, during the second action, children in Aleppo could receive toys and school stationary on the eve of a new academic year.

The meeting approved the choice of the way in which the humanitarian aid is distributed in Syria under this project, namely, through the Russian Center of Reconciliation of Warring Parties. In this way it reaches the targeted people in need and distributed regardless of their confession or other affiliation.

Representative of religious communities in the group expressed great gratitude for the assistance in preparing and implementing the action to the Presidential Directorate for Domestic Policy, the Russian Ministry of Defense and Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The meeting considered it important to continue the work for aid to the suffering population of Syria, who stand in an acute need of it. Representatives of Christian and Muslim communities stated that they continued raising funds for these aims, which will be then used together in carrying out further actions.

Hieromonk Stephan noted that His Holiness Patriarch Kirill of Moscow and All Russia personally coordinated the development of the project, reminding the meeting that the already collected aid was based on the contribution made on behalf of His Holiness.

The group outlined prospect for broadening its work in coordination with Syrian religious communities, as it was discussed during the joint round-table conference held on June 23, 2017, in Beirut.
