Archimandrite Tikhon (Shevkunov), executive secretary of the Patriarchal Council for Culture;

Archpriest Vsevolod Chaplin, chairman of the Synodal Department for Church-Society Relations;

Mr. Vladimir Legoida, chairman of the Synodal Information Department.

His Holiness Patriarch Kirill of Moscow and All Russia launched an initiative of establishing the Supreme Church Council at the Bishops' Council that took place in February 2011. The Bishops' Council supported the initiative and resolved to give formal status to the conferences of heads of the Synodal Departments as Supreme Church Council by analogy with the body that had been established by the 1917 All-Russia Church Council which had to end its work in the years of persecution.

The Holy Synod, at its session held on 22 March 2011, adopted Provisions of the Supreme Church Council of the Russian Orthodox Church and approved its membership.
