The homily was delivered by Father Daniil Toropov, cleric of the Church of the Resurrection at Danilovskaya Sloboda, Moscow.

At the end of the Liturgy the Primate of the Russian Church celebrated the Office of the Triumph of Orthodoxy.

Then in his capacity as the First Hierarch of the Russian Church His Holiness Patriarch Kirill addressed the flock:

“Dear bishops, fathers, brothers and sisters, I congratulate you all on the completion of the first week of Great Lent and the great feast of the Triumph of Orthodoxy.

The Triumph of Orthodoxy is tied to the victory of Orthodoxy over heresies. And heresy is precisely that false knowledge aimed at destroying the true faith and tearing people away from Christ the Saviour. The first thousand years of Christianity were devoted to the struggle against this false knowledge.

Yet probably the most terrible struggle unfolded in the twentieth century when a new false knowledge was bolstered by the might of a powerful state which had the political aim of destroying belief in God. All efforts were targeted at this goal, yet as for the rulers who set this temporal framework and stated that within so many years there would be no more religion – “with a clamor their memory has been wiped out” (Ps. 9.7). And we together every first Sunday of Great Lent recall the great deeds of all those who defended the Orthodox faith, who established the Orthodox faith both throughout the world and in our blessed land.

May the Lord through their prayers preserve us in spiritual unity, in the Orthodox faith, in wisdom and love, in purity and the ability not only in thought or in words to consider ourselves to be Orthodox, but with our lives confirm those great truths which the Lord has brought to us so that people may truly become happy, so that they find joy in this life and in the life everlasting. Amen.”

For her contribution to the development of church-state relations and the occasion of her birthday the deputy director of the department for culture, sport, tourism and nationalities policy O. S. Koroleva was awarded the Order of Saint Euphrosyne, Grand Princess of Moscow, 2nd Degree.
